

My Professional Bio: Esther Emalo Odu

Esther Emalo Odu, 33, a Nigerian residing in Seychelles, is an accomplished nurse with a decade of dedicated clinical experience characterised by excellence, compassion, and professional development. She commenced her nursing career with a Diploma in Nursing from the National Institute of Health and Social Studies, Seychelles, graduating as the Best Academic Performer of her cohort, thereby demonstrating her dedication to excellence from the outset.

In the last ten years, Esther has developed an exceptional clinical portfolio, working in two of the most challenging and high-acuity specialities: the Intensive Care Unit (ICU) and the Male Surgical Unit. Her experience in these demanding environments has endowed her with superior clinical judgement, robust patient-management abilities, and the capacity to provide high-quality care under duress.

Motivated by a commitment to continuous education, Esther enhanced her academic credentials by obtaining a First-Class Bachelor's Degree in Nursing from Edinburgh Napier University, Scotland, where she excelled in both academic and clinical performance. Advancing her career, she obtained a Master of Science in Nursing from Sunderland University in the United Kingdom, enhancing her proficiency in evidence-based practice, leadership, and advanced clinical care.

Esther's objective is founded on professionalism, commitment, and a patient-centric methodology. By integrating robust academic accomplishments with substantial practical experience, I aim to consistently enhance nursing practice and improve health outcomes through proficient, compassionate care.
